"Softly, softly, my prince, wag thy tongue warily--nay, suffer it not to wag at all. Trust in me--all shall go well in the end." Then he added to himself: "Sir Miles! Then in God's name call the pig eightpence, and heaven bless the day that freed my conscience of this awesome thing!" Miles Hendon forgot all decorum in his delight; and surprised the King and wounded his dignity, by throwing his arms around him and hugging him. The woman made her grateful adieux and started away with her pig; and when the constable opened the door for her, he followed her out into the narrow hall.
So the next time your conscience condemns you because of sin, don’t try to silence it with your good works. Look to the cross and say, “Father, thank You for Jesus and the cross. Jesus was totally condemned on my behalf for this sin, so there is now absolutely no condemnation left for me.” Then, your conscience will look at the cross and say, “Ahhhh...peace.” My friend, Jesus’ finished work at the cross truly sets you free! © Copyright Joseph Prince, 2008–2019 All rights reserved under International Copyright Law. Towards the end of the play he attempts to explain this to Horatio: Claudius, he says, hath killed the king and whored my mother, Popped in between th’election and my hopes [v.ii.64-5]. The metaphor in the second line suggests musical beds in a French farce. Even at this stage in the action, Hamlet cannot separate the private from the public, experience from idea, the sexual from the political. Those internalised figures of father and mother, authority and security, have been displaced. Cite this chapter as: Hattaway M. (1987) The conscience of the prince. In: Hamlet. The Critics Debate.
